Reviewers can "like" Pencil strokes, the act of liking triggering a comment. These comments are shared with you and other users. So, for example, if you like a stroke, the user who created the stroke may then comment on the stroke, or a different user may comment and hit "like" as well. The program now allows you to view and perform Actions on the same file in real time as the collaborator, allowing you to act on the same asset while the other person is doing the same, and then allowing you to see all the changes in one visual review. When the user taps the "like" button, the reviewer is notified of the request. It's a quick and easy way for collaborators to review images in real time. While using this feature, you are always notified of any comments or requests from others. It's part of Adobe Sensei, the AI software that helps Photoshop make those comments easier and more natural. You can open many files and comment on the notes for each in one session—you don't have to open, comment on, wait, close, open, and comment on the next one. This makes it easier for reviewers to "like" strokes, comment, import, export, and share the same large file in real time. Browse your library and nest files right on top of the artwork. This allows stakeholders to see relevant changes across the library. Once you have begun to comment on files, you can converse directly with other reviewers. Use the comments to track and resolve changes or to exact details for further approval.
